

PROMOTING INCLUSIVE LEARNING THROUGH PUBLIC ACCESS TO UNIVERSITY LIBRARIES

The University demonstrates its dedication to Sustainable Development Goals (SDG 4: Quality Education) and SDG 11: Sustainable Cities and Communities by providing public access to its libraries, books, and academic publications. The institution recognizes that education is a shared responsibility and that access to knowledge should extend beyond the walls of the university.

To support this vision, the University allows students, researchers, educators, and community members to visit its libraries and use available learning resources for research, study, and lifelong learning. These include printed books, journals, theses, digital archives, and other reference materials essential for academic and professional growth.

In addition, the University promotes digital inclusion through its online library system, enabling wider access to open educational resources and research outputs. Periodic literacy programs, reading campaigns, and library orientations are also conducted to encourage community engagement and strengthen the culture of learning.

By opening its libraries to the public, the University fosters inclusive education, knowledge sharing, and community development, aligning with the global goal of ensuring equitable access to information and lifelong learning opportunities for all.
